HE SAVED THE LIVES OF
ONE HUNDRED FIFTY

his force protecting the company trains and property, and while so doing did a heroic act, of which he could hardly be brought to speak of.
One of the passengers on the train when he reached here, said that it was hard for the people on the train to get Williams to talk of his feat, but they finally induced him to tell it, which he said in this way:

Williams' Own Story
"You see I did not do much and didn't do any more than any other feller would ha' done if he'd been in my place. I have charge of the section which runs from half a mile east of Ardmore to seven and one-half miles west. This here bridge on which we're workin' now went out in 1915 but that flood wasn't nothin' like this one.

"It had been a rainin' quite a little this spring and the big blizzard of April had left all the ground hereabouts soaked with water, so when this last storm come on and the water fell so quick it run off'n this dern gumbo like it had been a duck's back and old Hat Creek started on a rampage. It rained pretty heavy Tuesday mornin' and the old creek, she came up quite a bunch, but it rained and hailed like fury for about two hours Tuesday afternoon and the stream a few miles and then hell tore loose.

"I kept watchin' the big new bridge over the creek all afternoon and the water kept comin' up and comin' up until it reached the ties. Then I got worried for fear the bridge would go out, so I went back to town and reported about it to the operator. He told the dispatcher at Alliance about it. The telephone and telegraph wires runnin' west had all gone down and we couldn't get Edgemont or anyone at all west of the creek. Jack Welch, the dispatcher at Alliance, talked to me over the railroad phone and asked me if I could get to the west end of the bridge, across the creek, and put out a red light and some stop signals so as to hold the night passenger train, No. 42, which was due about 9 o'clock. I told him I'd try and went back to the bridge.

He Went Across
"When I got there again the water was clear over the top of the bridge and it looked to me like one of the steel spans had gone out. We'd tried to phone the government farm, which is west of the creek from town to ask them to go down and put out a red light, but their phone line had gone out, too, and we just couldn't reach anybody.

"Well, I jest figured the chances was probably against me a gittin' across but it was only my life against 150 passengers on No. 42 and I figured that the train would be a runnin' pretty fast when they come up to west grade to the bridge and they might be into it before they saw it, so I walked up the creek half a mile, stripped off my clothes, tied my red lantern, red flag and torpedoes to my back and swam across.

"There wasn't no many trees up there and she was only about 600 feet wide, but that water was full of halibut and cold as hell. It was raining to beat the band and dark as blues, but it wasn't so bad until I got into the main channel. I'd rather tried it in a boat but there wasn't no boat anywhere near that I know of. She carried me down to that big dike just above the railroad bridge. I sure felt good when I hit that fence on the west side and drug myself out on the bank.

"There hain't much more to tell. I walked down the track bout half a mile, set the flag and lantern in the middle of the rails, and put the torpedoes on the rails. Didn't have no matches, so I couldn't light the lantern, but I figured they'd see my signals all right."

"A Pretty Lookin' Sight"
"But how did you get back to Ardmore?" he was asked. "Well," said John, "I walked up to the government farm, but when I got close to the office and saw the bright lights there I remembered I didn't have no clothes on and I thought I'd make a pretty lookin' sight bustin' in on 'em like that, so I walked up the stream and swam back."

"Did you find your clothes when you got back to the east side," he was asked. "No, sirc, I didn't look for 'em. I just hottedfoot it up the track for home. The wife and kids was somewhat surprised when I come in but I got warmed up, put on some more clothes and went back a couple of hours later to watch that bridge."

John Williams is 42 years of age and has a wife and two children. He was raised in Wisconsin on the banks of the Mississippi and swims like a fish. If he hadn't been a good swimmer he couldn't have made his way half across the raging, hell filled stream, which was over 600 feet wide at the point he went across and which was filled with floating logs, with here and there an occasional dead horse or cow.

W. T. Crawford, residing on his farm, 10 miles southeast of Cameron, had the misfortune of losing 24 head of fine hogs recently. "A veterinary surgeon who was called to the farm, made a diagnosis, and found that the animals died from eating 'Crawfoot,' a weed which was growing plentifully in the hog pasture.

Laramie County, Wyoming holds in the hollow of its hand a generous helping of INDEPENDENCE for the farmer.

It is destined to become one of the richest agricultural sections of the United States.
Land that was at one time devoted entirely to cattle grazing TODAY is carved into farms and the newcomers already are reaping financial rewards far beyond their most sanguine anticipations. Each succeeding year has increased the yield of all classes of crops, and so well have the people of this community prospered that they enjoy luxuries that were undreamed of before they cast their lot in this favored spot.

Sugar Beets yield 20 tons to the acre and are easy to raise. Wyoming will soon be one of the greatest producers of this necessary staple in the union.

The Frank Land & Investment Company is the forerunner in that locality and has choice sections for sale.

If you want a HAY, CATTLE, OR SHEEP RANCH, DRY, IRRIGATED OR SU-GAR BEET FARM in any size acreage—WE HAVE IT, and PRICED RIGHT.
